

1. Campaign Performance

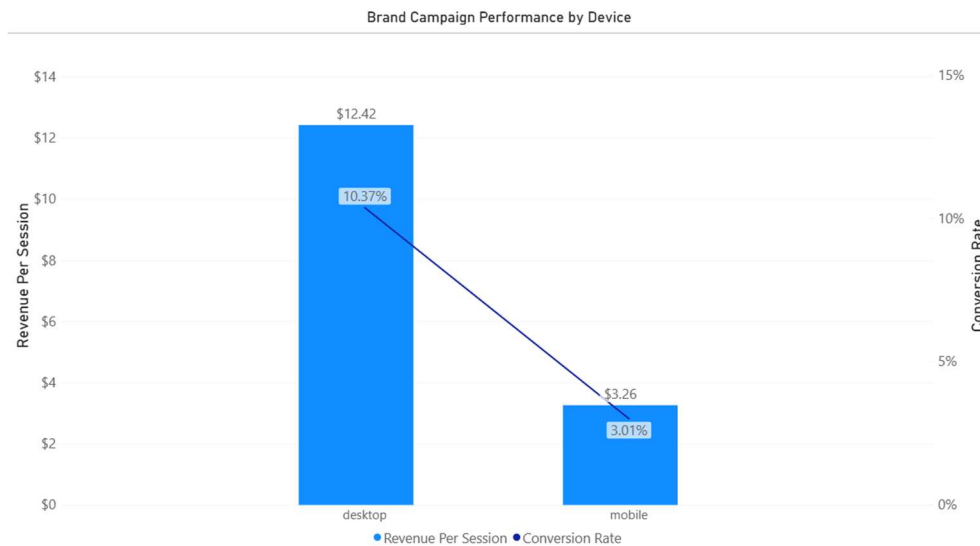

- Nonbrand generated more orders; Brand achieved a higher conversion rate

- Nonbrand campaigns generated the most unit sales for every product

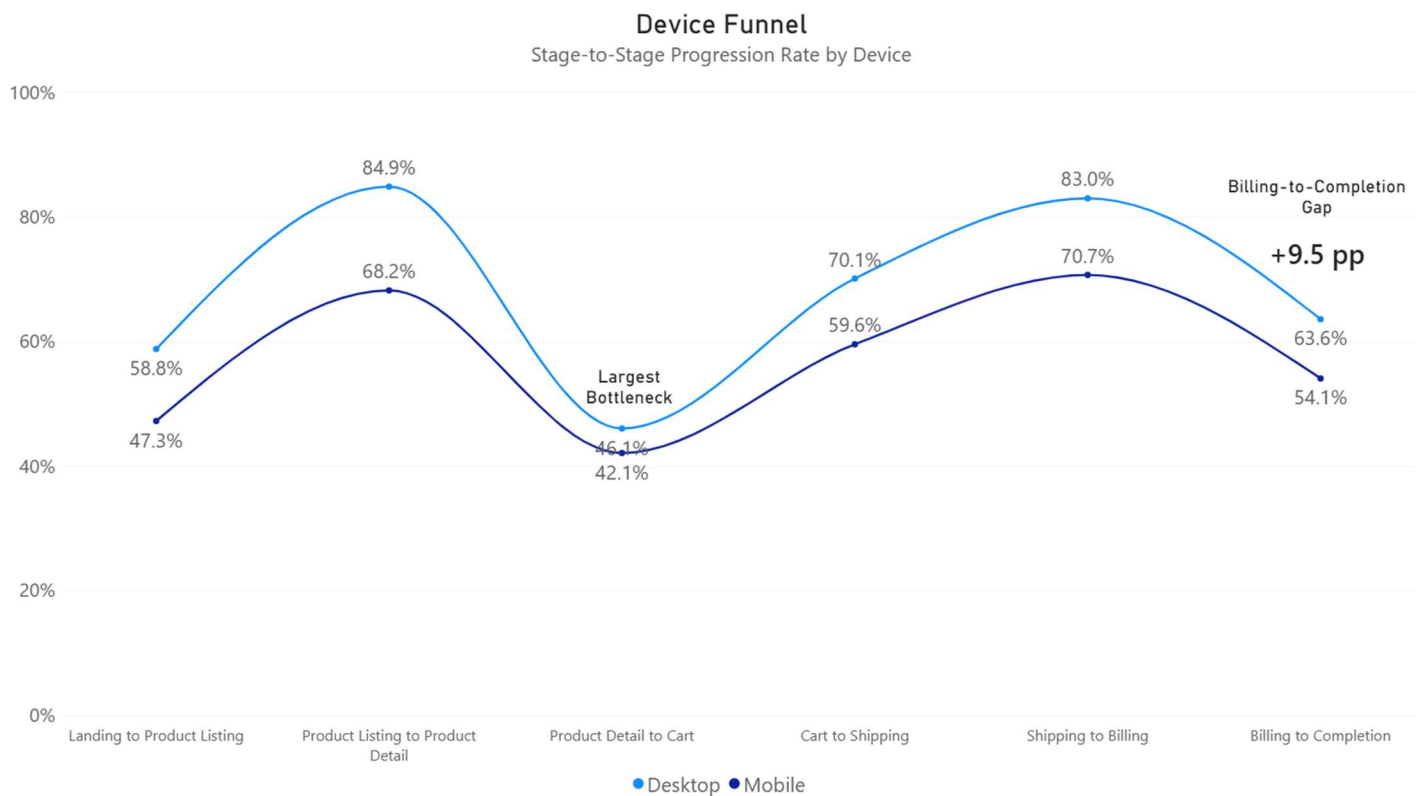

- Within the Brand campaign, desktop outperformed mobile in revenue per session and conversion

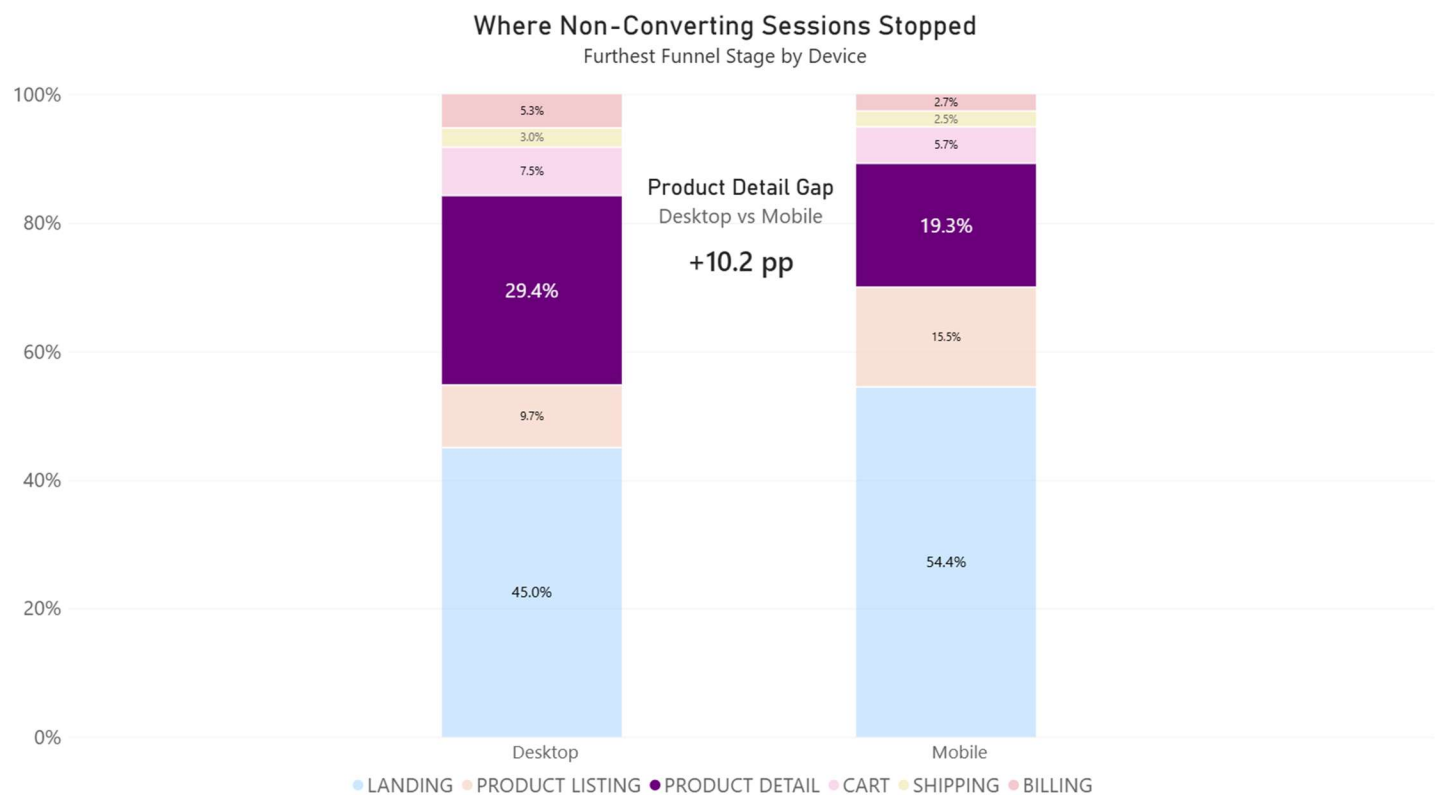

2. Device Experience and Funnel

- Desktop had a higher progression rate than mobile at every transition
- Product Detail to Cart had the lowest progression rate for both devices
- Desktop's billing-to-completion rate was 9.5 percentage points higher than mobile's

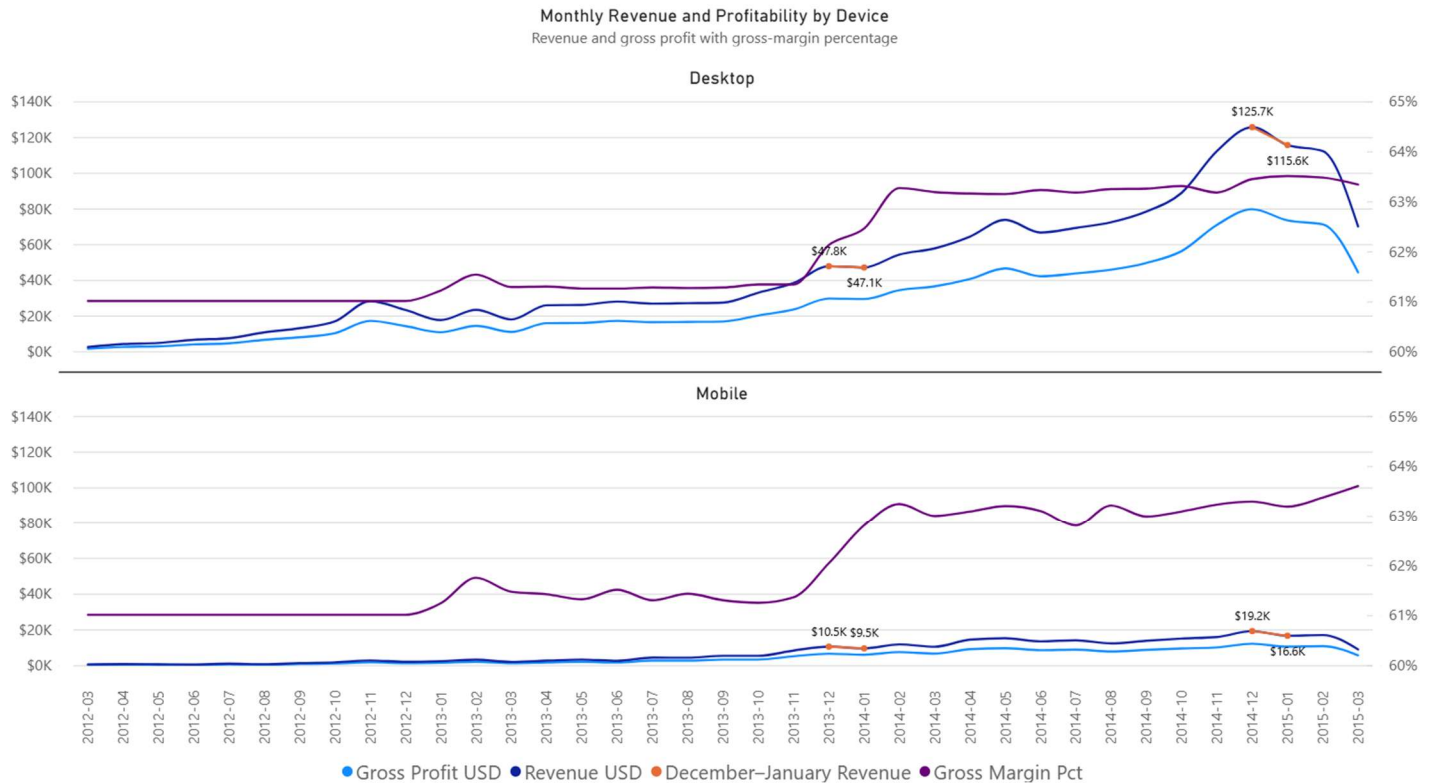

- Desktop had a higher share of non-converting sessions whose furthest stage was Product Detail

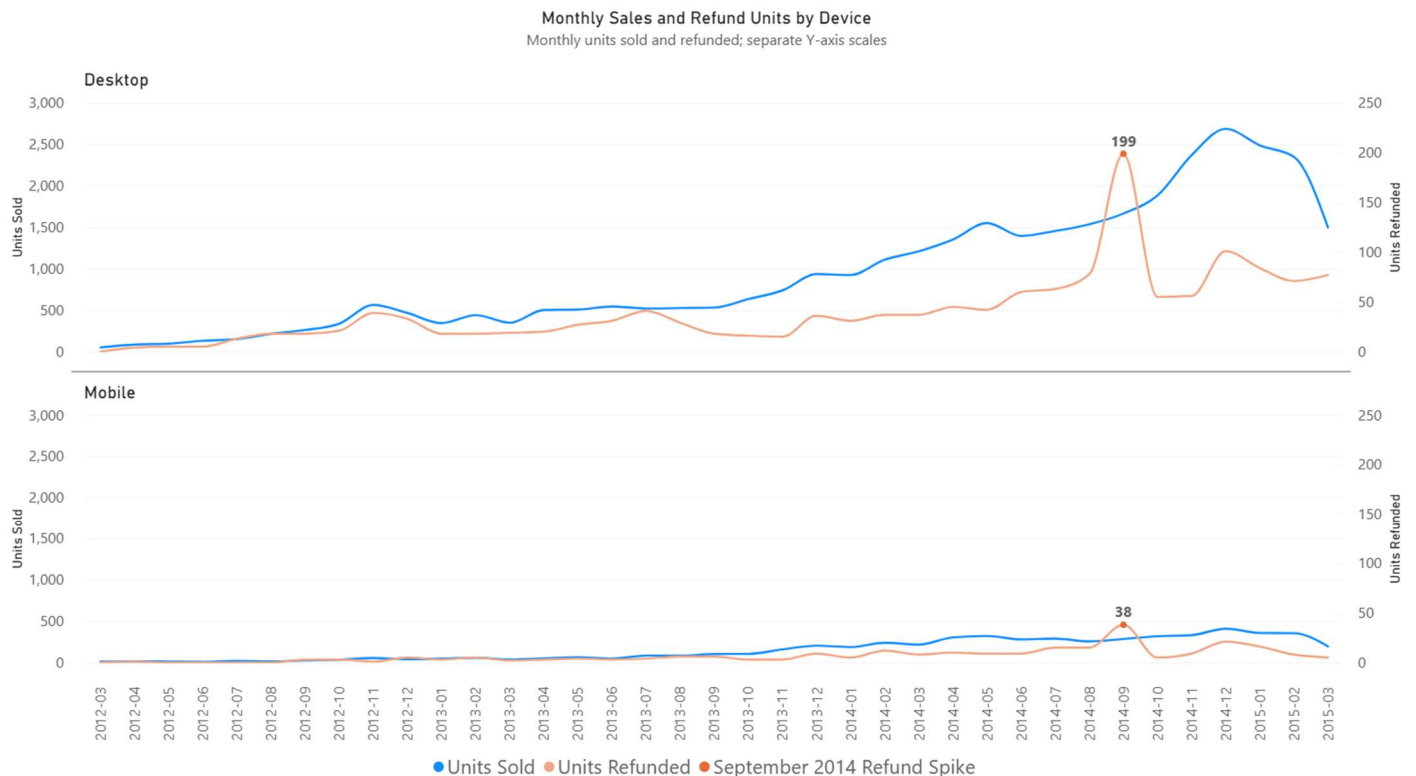

3. Revenue Performance Over Time

- Overall, the trend of gross revenue increased for both desktop and mobile, with some variation from month to month
- Revenue increased in December 2013 and December 2014 before declining the following January. Gross-margin percentage stays relatively stable.

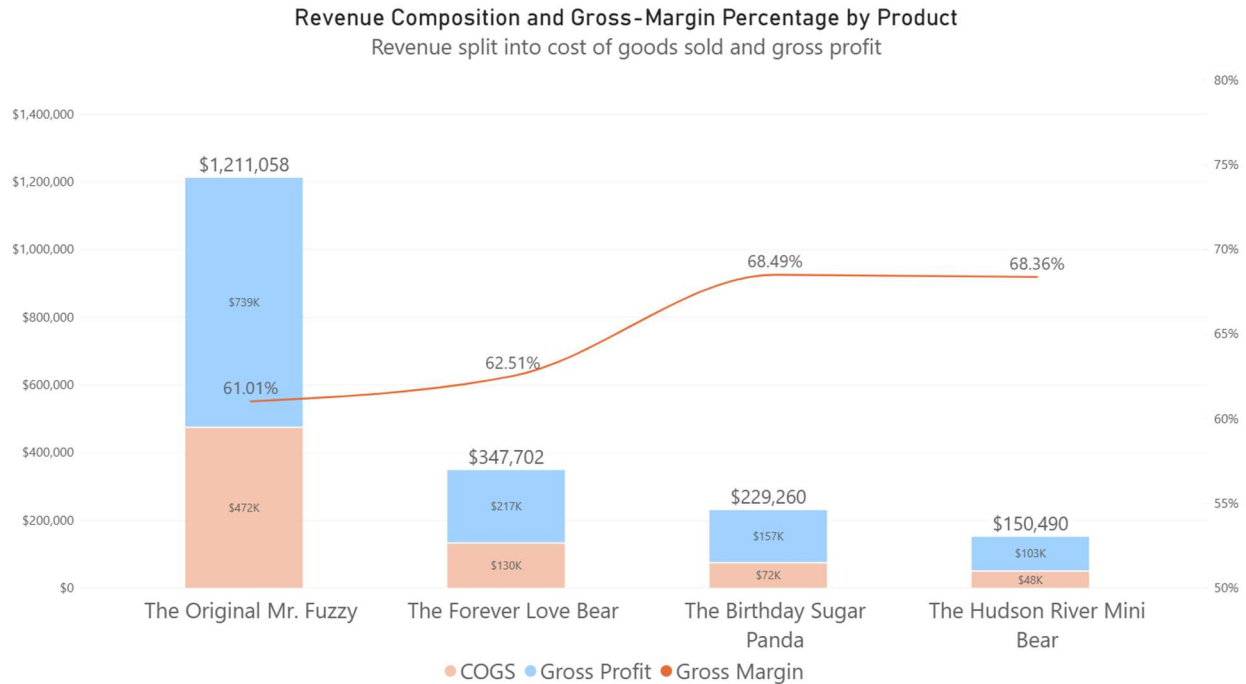

- Refund units generally increased alongside units sold, with an unusual spike in September 2014 for both devices
 - Refunds are grouped by month and are not necessarily tied to orders placed during the same month

4. Product Economics

- The Original Mr. Fuzzy had the lowest gross-margin percentage at 61.01%, but generated the greatest total gross profit at $738,893 because of its substantially higher unit sales
 - Its higher sales volume also explains why it has the largest total refund amount
- Birthday Sugar Panda had the highest gross-margin percentage of 68.49%, but generated the third-highest gross profit at $157,028 because of its smaller revenue base
- The Hudson River Mini Bear generated the least revenue at $150,490 and the least gross profit at $102,869

- The Original Mr. Fuzzy generated the highest refund amount at $61,838 because of its substantially higher sales volume, despite having the second-highest unit refund rate
- The Birthday Sugar Panda's comparatively high refund rate at 6.04% warrants further product-specific investigation
- The Hudson River Mini Bear had the lowest refund amount at $1,919 and lowest unit refund rate at 1.28%
